The aim of the build project is to support Salford City Council's environmental initiatives and reduce energy consumption to a minimum whilst maximizing the opportunity to design a high performance building. Architecture Liverpool was appointed as consultant for the design, planning and scheme management of the development. An energy analysis, carried out by Anadol was the key input to the development that gave the project key insights into the different aspects of the building and its occupants and how the design could be improved. The development not only incorporates passive and active facades but all aspects of the building have been calculated to make the greatest impact on saving energy. In 32 patients with acute glomerulonephritis (AGN) the efficacy of a single oral dose of 400 mg of cyclophosphamide was studied in a double-blind study. The patients were randomly allocated to treatment with cyclophosphamide and amiloride (C/A) or amiloride alone (A) for 3 months. As part of this study, renal function (measured by endogenous creatinine clearance) and proteinuria were assessed serially. The response to therapy was graded by complete remission and partial remission. C/A was significantly more effective than A, with complete remission in 44 vs 19% and partial remission in 45 vs 7%. Cyclophosphamide produced a significant fall in proteinuria. Nevertheless, the benefit of cyclophosphamide was largely offset by the toxicity of the drug.
